A Case For the History

“My mortal body is not of value. What is valuable now and in future is my spirit of resistance against your crimes against humanity. Valuable are my writings that are not in your possession. You can kill me like tens of thousands of patriotic and honorable women and men who were killed by your executioners for their beliefs. It would only be a great honor. What you cannot kill is my spirit, my tenacity, my honor and passion for the truth all of which I will leave behind in my letters to the tribunal of history. You cannot destroy my writings, which inevitably will uproot your tyranny and deception from Iran forever and reveal your identity to the people of Iran and the world.” (From letter to the head justice of the revolutionary court, page 50)

Abbas Amir Entezam, Iran's Longest held prisoner of conscience since 1979; Deputy prime minister and spokesperson for the transitional government of Iran, 1979; Winner of 1996 Bruno Kriskey Human Rights Award

“Our struggle for securing a fair trial for Abbas Amir Entezam will not end. This book is an introduction to the indictment that will some day be presented in that trial.” (page 19)

Abdolkarim Lahiji, Attorney ; Vice president of International Federation of Human Rights

“This case is not about my husband alone but all people of Iran have a high stake in it and their life today is in part a product of this past mistrial.” (page 125)

Elahe Amir Entezam, wife

“The letters collected in this book reflect a voice that seeks justice and pay tribute to the collective memory of Iranians. The voice of Amir Entezam, his wife and his lawyers documenting his case for the history will strengthen culture of due process and civil rights in Iran.”

Ramin Ahmadi, MD, MPH; Director, Griffin Center for Health and Human Rights
